Her approach integrates both the science and art of business into her practice which embraces the learnings of neuroscience and the principles of change management for individuals and organizations.

This method realizes positive results such as:

- Assessments that are specific and actionable
- Implementation/development plans that are complete and 'do-able'
- Metrics that detect results early and enable ongoing design of sustainable programs/processes

Client Results:

- Executive Coaching – Helped a key leader identify and leverage his strengths while implementing a development plan that focused on practicing emotional intelligence, particularly empathy and social skills. He re-defined himself from someone who was perceived as challenging to work with to a more authentic, collaborative partner and was able to achieve a more collegial environment resulting in more effective working relationships.
- Targeted Action Plan for Comprehensive Guest Experience – After numerous acquisitions and integration efforts, key leadership at a prestigious Manhattan university realized it needed a service initiative to re-design a comprehensive guest experience. Working with the Provost's Office, we thoroughly documented the current situation of staff, students, and faculty through new survey results, existing survey reports, touch-point process mapping, and stakeholder interviews. The clear and actionable results drove integrated action through engagement teams, process changes, and ongoing assessment such as listening posts, guest experience committees, and data from training programs.
- Strategy Plan Development and Leadership Team Ownership – Hired to facilitate a strategic planning event, we infused powerful team building techniques into the agenda. As a result, the team learned to articulate behaviors from a strengths perspective and to identify opportunities to work together more collaboratively. They intentionally designated roles to support the plan based on identified strengths, taking more ownership in its achievement.
